HP Completes Strategic Alternatives for its PSG

HP on 27 October last announced that it has completed its evaluation of strategic alternatives for its Personal Systems Group (PSG) and has decided that the unit will remain part of the company. "HP objectively evaluated the strategic, financial and operational impact of spinning off PSG. It's clear after our analysis that keeping PSG within HP is right for customers and partners, right for shareholders, and right for employees," said Meg Whittan, HP president and chief executive officer. "HP is committed to PSG, and together we are stronger." The strategic review involved subject matter experts from across the businesses and functions. The data-driven evaluation revealed the depth of the integration that has occurred across key operations such as supply chain, IT and procurement. PSG is a key component of HP's strategy to deliver higher value, lasting relationships with consumers, small- and medium-sized businesses and enterprise customers ■
